breaks down to $3.3 billion for European companies, $2.2 billion Americas and slightly less than $400 million for the rest of the world. On that basis, Europe has increased its grip on the market compared to the relatively slender lead it had over the Americas. However, with more than twice as many European companies in the list as their transatlantic counterparts, the Americas has the edge in terms of average turnover per company. Of the top 10 companies in this year's table, the combined turnover of the five American companies was more than $250 million greater than the British, Belgian and Norwegian contractors who also formed the d&ri100's upper echelons.

NORTHSTAR CONTINUES TO SHINE

Europe may have the most companies in the d&ri100 – more than 60 of them – but
